Hubert SCH RUEBBERS

Identity 1 has always been a very friendly and congenial individual. However, when the writer first met him in 1957 he appeared to have little comprehension of the potential value to his service of close cooperation with KUBARK, or of the underlying principles of service to service liaison generally. At that time he was, of course, still relatively new on the job. Since then he has not only gained professional experience but, in particular, he has also become increasingly impressed with KUBARK's competence as a service. He has frequently stressed the importance of his service's liaison with KUBARK, emphasizing that he values this relationship above all other liaison maintained by his service. Although Subject, because of his late introduction into the intelligence field, has not achieved the level of professional competence which might be desired of someone in his position, his strong positive orientation toward KUBARK, combined with his position, makes him a valuable contact deserving of continued attention. Aside from his current caution, inspired by the CALLIKAK Affair, with respect to undertaking operations with flap potential, experience has shown that he is generally very amenable to KUBARK proposals for joint operational activities or support of KUBARK activities by his service whenever possible. There has been no evidence which would suggest Subject as a likely target for recruitment under present circumstances; however, if the current relationship with him can be maintained and intensified it is considered possible that, as long as the Communist menace remains a reality, his readiness to cooperate with KUBARK would survive any policy revisions by his government designed to relax its ties with ODYOKE.
